"Using Racial and Linguistic Microaggressions to Study Everyday Racism"

With Different Eyes:

A Conference for Teachers of English Learners Across the Disciplines

NOV. 3, 2012

8AM - 3PM

UCLA

*Making the Common Core Our Own:
English Learners Get "College Ready"*

Highly respected professor and researcher Daniel Solórzano will set the stage by describing status quo attitudes about those who speak languages other than "standard" English. More particularly, he will describe the barrage of subtle and not-so-subtle microaggressions our English learners – and all of us – are subjected to every day. What do these linguistic and racial disparagements sound like and feel like? How do they chip away at the possibility for students to reach their full potentials? And what counter-narratives can classroom teachers and administrators construct to change the culture of schools?

Then our classroom colleagues K-university will engage us in hands-on workshops, demonstrating pedagogies and practices successful with their own English learners across the disciplines.

A Sampler of Workshops:

- Critical Media Literacy: A Framework and Strategies for English Learners, Jeff Share & Peter Carlson
- Evaluating Sources: The Common Core State Standards and Social Studies, Daniel Buccieri
- When Valuing Language is Center Stage: Analytical Reading and Writing in a Multi-linguistic Classroom, Marlene Carter
- Graffiti Art as a Gateway to Analyzing Social Justice Issues, Jason Rangel-Torres
- From Lemons to Lions: Expository Text and the Primary Writer, Robyn Wisinski
- What Parents of English Learners Know, Judy Jurado McKiernan

Conference Fee: $90 - due by October 24, 2012 / Early Bird Fee: $75 - due by September 28, 2012
